The Light Stuff

Life moves fast, and your watch needs to keep up without weighing you down. These sporty titanium timekeepers endure the toughest trials, yet are poetry in motion at a fraction of the weight in steel. Don't be fooled by the light-as-air feel—matte gray titanium is strong enough for the aerospace industry, and perfect for your next rough-and-tumble wristwatch. | By Laurie Kable |

Depth Perception

Hublot's limited-edition Oceanographic 4000 diver's watch can handle the extreme pressure of a 4,000-meter dive... even if you can't. After 18 months of R&D and testing, this technical feat—housed in a robust 48 mm case made of noncorrosive grade 2 titanium—is making history. Split Personality

IWC's rugged Ingenieur family fuses brains and brawn within the 45 mm Ingenieur Double Chronograph Titanium. The collection's first rattrapante (split seconds) model allows you to track two separate times simultaneously with a second stopwatch hand. High Flyer

Inspired by the Type XX chronograph designed by Breguet for French aviators in the 1950s, this year's Type XXI flyback chronograph is ready for takeoff in grade 2 titanium. In addition to a minutes counter, positioned in the center next to the seconds counter, the flyback function stops, resets and restarts timing with the push of a single button. Fast Track

Blancpain's L-Evolution Super Trofeo collection gets your engine revving with a flyback chronograph that pairs a tough titanium case with carbon fiber lugs and dial. A tribute to its namesake, the Lamborghini Blancpain Super Trofeo racing series, the watch's rotor depicts twin checkered flags while the hour indexes mimic the Lamborghini Gallardo's taillights. Speed Demon

The limited-edition Breitling for Bentley Supersports Light Body chronograph was along for the ride when driver Juha Kankkunen set a new world speed record—on ice, at 205.48 mph—in a special Bentley Continental GTC Supersports. The watch's signature knurled bezel and dashboard-style dial take their cues from the car's distinctive design codes. Light Body, \$10,005, by Breitling for Bentley Supersports at Westime
