

BEYOND THE SEA

•• You don't have to scuba to appreciate a dive watch's rugged, sporty sensibility. While these models are designed to be worn with neoprene at extreme depths, they're just as splashy at street level paired with jeans — L.K.

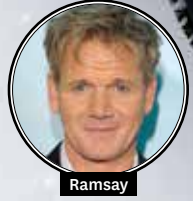

Cruise

Graham's Chronofighter Oversize Prodiver operates at a depth of 2,000 feet with a patented activation trigger to start, stop and reset the chronograph. Tom Cruise has been spotted wearing a Chronofighter; $13,400, at Westime, Beverly Hills, and Kenjo, New York

Ulysse Nardin's limited-edition Blue Sea is encased in vulcanized rubber-coated stainless steel with a wave pattern face. It's ready for action with water resistance to 200 meters. $10,900, at Tourneau TimeMachine, Kenjo and Cellini, New York and David Orgell, Beverly Hills

Linde Werdelin's roughly polished titanium Oktopus II is water-resistant to 300 meters. The brand's Reef digital diving attachment, which includes a compass and depth measure, can be snapped on to the watch case. $9,880, totallyworthit.com

Ramsay

Breitling's Superocean Chronograph M2000 is the first watch to operate at a depth of 2,000 meters thanks to an exclusive system of controls that operate it magnetically. Gordon Ramsay wears the brand; $5,350, at Breitling, New York, and Westime, Los Angeles

Girard-Perregaux's Sea Hawk 1000 Meters Big Blue, limited to 15 numbered pieces, generates proceeds for the marine conservation efforts of Susan and David Rockefeller Jr. $10,900 in steel with rubber strap, at Girard-Perregaux, New York, and David Orgell, Beverly Hills
